JUAN CARLOS I, KING OF SPAIN

All those who were present saw and understood.

Know: That the Cortes Generales have approved and I come to sanction the following organic law.

STATEMENT OF MOTIVES

Today the world is undergoing profound changes that have obvious consequences in the structure, organization and functions of the Armies. Spain must accommodate these transformations, to ensure its own security and defense and to contribute to peace and to improve the international order.

Since the promulgation in 1980 of the Organic Law on Basic Criteria of National Defense and Military Organization, partially modified in 1984, the international frame of reference and Spanish society itself have profoundly changed without fundamentally altering the organizational model of our Armed Forces.

The new recruitment of our Armies, the disappearance of compulsory military service and the implementation of a model of professional Armed Forces are such relevant changes that they demand organic Defense legislation adapted to them.

The strategic scenario has seen the disappearance of the block politics that led the cold war and the emergence of globalization and a new framework in international relations. At the same time, along with the traditional risks and threats to peace, stability and security, others are emerging, such as transnational terrorism with a willingness and capacity to inflict damage indiscriminately.

Conventional wars are on the decline, but armed conflicts are proliferating which, both because of their causes and their effects, have notable implications beyond the place where they occur. Today, in addition to a basic right and a need of individuals and societies, security is a challenge, and making it effective requires the concurrence of the Defense as one of the necessary means to achieve it, together with the defense of rights, the fight for the eradication of poverty and development cooperation, which also contribute to this end.

In the field of security and defense, the interdependence between States is considerable, which is why they are grouped into organizations that promote, develop and increase levels of stability, such as the United Nations Organization and the Organization for Security and European Cooperation. Since 1980 Spain has been incorporated into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Western European Union. In addition, the European Constitution, recently ratified in a referendum by our country, establishes the bases for building a genuine common security and defense policy within the framework of the European Union. Our strategy must be based on a multilateral system of actions and initiatives, based on the recognition that the Security Council of the United Nations has the fundamental responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security.

We must also take into account the technological revolution of recent decades, some of whose innovations come from the Defense environment itself or have found application in it.

The international projection of Spain and our defense policy in foreign action as a whole means that, since the end of the 20th century, our Armed Forces have been acting outside our borders as observers, interposition forces, peacekeeping and of humanitarian aid.

This circumstance requires the inclusion in the Law of missions that were not expressly included in the previous regulations, rigorous approaches regarding respect for the international legality of said operations and even new ones regarding their control.

In relation to missions abroad, the Cortes Generales, which represent national sovereignty, must have a greater participation and leadership. The Law submits government decisions for debate and specifically regulates the conditions that must be met.

The President of the Government is responsible for managing crisis situations that affect Defense, as is the direction of the armed conflict. To assist you, the National Defense Council is created, an advisory, coordinating and consultative body whose composition is adjusted to the needs of each circumstance. The Minister of Defense is entrusted with the execution and development of defense policy.

In order to increase the effectiveness of the Armed Forces, the Law specifies their organization with criteria that make possible the joint action of the Armies. Unlike the previous one, which assigned missions to each Army, this one considers the Armed Forces as a single entity that integrates the different forms of action of its components and that enables the optimal use of their capabilities, without the former seeing their role diminished. specificity.

An organization is now established that clearly differentiates the organic and operational structure; the first, under the responsibility of the Army Chiefs of Staff, in charge of preparing the Force; the second, whose command falls to the Chief of Defense Staff, in charge of its use and established for the development of joint and combined action. On the other hand, the territorial organization is left without effect, although for purposes of representation and collaboration with the Public Administrations an institutional representation is maintained.

The organization of the Armed Forces, integrated into the Ministry of Defense, responds to the principles of hierarchy, discipline, unity and efficiency. The Law establishes the mandate to regulate the essential rules for the fulfillment of duty by those who make up the military organization. These rules, inspired by the tradition of our Armies and Navy, have constituted its guide of conduct and, in this way, now take on a renewed importance. Their regulatory development will allow them to be duly updated.

Regarding the resources of the National Defense, its contribution will be supported by the principle of gradual and proportionate contribution to the situation that must be faced.

To achieve a progressive response to crisis situations or armed conflicts, an appropriate and effective organization is required, with a sufficient degree of stability, which integrates the contribution of all kinds of resources necessary for civil preparedness and in which the Defense Council will also intervene. National.

The disappearance of compulsory military service requires that the right and duty that Spaniards have to defend Spain be more relevantly foreseen, as established in article 30 of the Constitution, for which the possibility of incorporating citizens, as reservists, to the Armed Forces.

This Law is enacted in accordance with the provisions of article 8.2 and in exercise of the competence provided for in article 149.1.4.^a of the Constitution.
